THE GRENADA SENTINEL.

VOLUME LXXI. GRENADA, MISSISSIPPI, FRIDAY, JULY 27, 1923. NUMBER 10.

JOHNSON MAKES RUSSELL RETRACT

Russell Backs Off. His Statement Connecting Johnston with the Filing of the Birkhead Suit. Johnston Evidently Put It to Lee Mary Pretty Heavy. Letter a Rebuke to Russell. More History.

Russell fluked. He is a fluker. He backed off and did what was demanded.

The public will remember that in one of the many letters which puffed up Lee Mary Russell has been writing in the interests of his man, Friday, more specifically Franklin, which was given to the press about ten days ago by Conner's campaign headquarters, Lee Mary mentioned Gov. Brewer and Oscar Johnson as having inspired or abetted the Birkhead suit. Particular reference is had here to the letter of Lee Mary Birkhead Russell to Mr. W. M. Knox at Okolona. And by the way, the making public of Lee's letters is just another one of the many good things which Conner has been doing in this campaign, and in this same connection, let the public ask, "Why is it that these Russell letters are sent always to Conner," The answer is, "Because Conner has the political bravery to use them and because he is recognized as the one who is carrying the burden of this fight for decency and for good government in Mississippi."

But when the letter to Mr. Knox, through some good agency, found its way into the Clarksdale Register, published in Oscar Johnston's home town, it is pretty well authenticated that Oscar was wrathy and that he called Lee Mary and told him that he had to withdraw the statement. What else he told Lee Mary can only be surmised. But Lee wrote Oscar a letter taking backwater.

It will be noted that Lee Mary used this language in his letter. Lee's pen, like his tongue, is used too much and this particular sentence brought a rebuke from Oscar Johnson. Oscar virtually told him that he regretted more that he (Russell) had so conducted himself as to make such a suit possible: "I am pleased to learn that you condemned the infamous case" to which sentence Mr. Johnston called particular attention in this language. "The suggestion that I 'condemned' the proceedings is inaccurate. It would be more accurate to say that I depored and regretted the institution of such proceedings, feeling that the same reflected upon and tended to discredit the State of Mississippi" which had been so badly discredited by him and Bilbo.

Gov. Brewer, it is recalled shot full of holes, immediately after the suit was filed. Russell's statement that he had anything to do with it.

Here follows Russell's letter which Johnston forced him to write and Johnston's reply:

"July 19, 1923.

"Hon. Oscar Johnston,
"Clarksdale, Mississippi,
"Dear Sir:—

"Since making a reference to you in a letter a few days ago as having been connected with the instigation of the infamous Birkhead suit against me, and which reference was made by me based on information that I had. I am now advised by friends that my information was erroneous and that I have done you an injustice. I am told that while it is true that the Birkhead woman offered you employment as an attorney to bring this suit that you not only refused to join her, or accept employment, but that you declined to have anything to do with it and condemned the proposed proceeding by her.

"I am pleased to learn that you condemned this infamous case and not wishing to do you an injustice. I am writing you and desire to state that I shall make no further reference to you with reference to this suit.

"Sincerely yours,
(Signed) "LEE M. RUSSELL,
"Governor"

Mr. Johnston's Reply

Mr. Johnston sent the following reply to Governor Russell:

"July 30,1923

"Governor Lee M. Russell,
"Jackson, Mississippi.
"Dear Sir:—

"Receipt is hereby acknowledged of your letter of the 19th instant.

"I appreciate your correction of the erroneous statement made by you, charging that I was in anywise interested or implicated in the instigation or conduct of the suit brought against you by Miss Francis Birkhead. Your information to the effect that I had nothing to do with this litigation is correct.

"The suggestion that I condemned the proceedings is inaccurate. It would be more accurate to say that I deplored and regretted the institution of such a proceeding, feeling that the same reflected upon and tended to discredit the State of Mississippi.

"The matter was of no interest to me and no concern of mine and I am glad to note that you are now convinced that I had no part in and no connection with this unfortunate incident in Mississippi's history, and am very glad to note that you shall make no further reference to me in connection with this matter.

"I am definitely out of the political arena, and shall expect and demand, as a private citizen of the State, immunity from misrepresentation of any sort..

"Yours truly,
(Signed)

JOHN R. SMITH DIED IN U. S. HOSPITAL

Mr. John Rollay Smith died Monday of this week at 10:50 o'clock at the United States Hospital in Memphis. His remains were brought to Grenada Tuesday morning, and after funeral services conducted at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Smith, by Rev. R. A. Tucker of the Methodist Church, were laid to rest in Odd Fellows' cemetery that afternoon with Masonic ceremonies.

Mr. Smith was 30 years old Jan. 8, last. He was an industrious, trustworthy, honest and obliging young man, and soon obtained the confidence of all with whom he dealt. In the years ago he united with the Methodist church and had kept his obligation according to the best lights before him.

He underwent an operation for appendicitis and gallstones, which was evidently the immediate cause of his death. He had never been a well man since his return from France, where he saw service at Chateau Thierry and other places where the fighting was terrific. In the early days of the war he enlisted with the marines in California. He did valiant service in the cause of his country. On his return to the United States he was soon taken in charge by the government, which realized that the impairment of his physical condition grew out of his fighting for the Stars and Stripes on Flanders fields. He was sent to the A. & M. College by the government, and at the time he was sent to the U. S. hospital in Memphis was doing dairying work for the government.

Since his return from France he made Miss Lelia Barnett, of Clarksdale, his wife. The union had been blessed with two bright little children and the two had planned together many days of joy and happiness as they looked down the vista of time.

It is a sad dispensation of fate that carries this worthy young man away, but in due time the mists will be cleared away and God in His tenderness and mercy will reveal why His pilgrimage on earth was ended so early.

To the bereft wife and the little children, as well as to the parents, The Sentinel tenders the sincerest sympathy.

CARD FROM R. M. WOOD

To the Voters of Beat 1:—

Due to the fact that I have had to work every day, I have been unable to find the time to see as many of you as I would like with reference to my candidacy for Constable. Notwithstanding reports that I have withdrawn from the race, I am in to the finish and I respectfully solicit the support and influence of all of you. If elected, I promise you that I will make you a faithful and diligent officer and shall serve you to the best of my ability.

Respectfully,
R. M. (BOB) WOOD

MIKE CONNER ADDRESSES GRENADA COUNTY VOTERS

Speaks to Splendid Audience Wednesday Night. Speech a Frank Business-like Discussion of State Affairs. Makes No Factional Appeal and Shows What Factionalism Has Cost the State. He and He Almost Alone Showing Up the corruption of Russell and Bilbo and He Thinks He Should Be Rallied To by the People of the State Who Deplore Present Political Conditions. Is No Trimmer or Middle of the Roader. Speech Makes Good Impression.

Leaders in Conner's Speech: Is opposed to factionalism for the sake of factions and shows in many ways what the factionalism practiced in Mississippi has cost the State.

If made Governor promises a square deal for all, and that when a proposition is brought him by those who voted against him it shall have the same earnest, faithful consideration as if brought him by those who voted for him.

As a proof that he will be fair and just to all, cites his record as Speaker of the House for 8 years when factionalism at times ran high, yet there was never an appeal from his rulings, a thing that could not be said of any other man who presided over the House for even 4 years, and that 90 per cent of the members of the House for the eight years are supporting him in this race.

Gives the pages of the legislative record to show that his every promise is backed by performance. Promises, he said, are easily made, but he asks that he be tried on what he has said and done in the legislature.

Shows where the taxpayers' money goes, and that more than 80 per cent of the tax levy in every County is local, the people of those counties either vote it themselves or permit the expense incurred.

Of the 8 mill tax levy for the State, he says 51½ per cent goes for education; 12½ per cent for health work and for the care of the unfortunates in the State's benevolent institutions; 9½ per cent to the Confederate soldiers and the remainder of the 8 mills for paying the members of the judiciary, state officers and sundry other things.

Asks that his moral life and how he has lived as a private citizen be looked into in applying tests to him. States that he is the superintendent of the Sunday School in his church and that he has tried to lead a life that the womanhood of the State would approve.

Would not have anybody to vote for him because of his church allegiance, or on account of the Masonic Lodge, or because he attended any particular college, but wants the people to weigh him and see if if he squared with what the hour demanded in a Governor.

Said that Bilbo "is trying to laugh himself from the jail to the Governor's office" and that "that man's political life began in bribery and ended with the Insane Hospital debauchery". He apologized for having to "skin an asylum skunk" and for the necessity of "picking the feathers out of a jail bird."

Said he had never ridden any man's coat tail and that if he got to be Governor and anybody got on his coat tail that he would knock them off.

Said Russell had anointed Franklin as his successor and asked "when did the day start that Mississippians had to have some discredited politican name their Governor for them?"

Said he is carrying the banner for decency and that he was the one being the most bitterly attacked by Franklin, Russell and Bilbo and for that reason he thought he is entitled to the support of the people who wanted a real house cleaning in Mississippi.

Mike Conner, candidate for Governor, spoke to an audience that nearly filled the court house here Wednesday night. But for a heavy rain which continued up until very nearly night, there would have been several hundred more present and not room in the court house to hold them. He was presented by Hon. A. M. Carothers who served in the Senate during Mr. Conner's first term as Speaker. Mr. Conner gave a plain, straightforward business dis-

BAPTIST SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION MEETS

On last Sunday, July 2, the Grenada County Baptist Sunday School Convention met at Bethel Church in the Oxberry community, C. C. White presiding. The attendance was unusually large and such a dinner as can only be found on an occasion like this was served on the ground. Mr. Buck Martin, of Holcomb, led the devotional exercises, after which Miss Minnie Brown talked very interestingly of the Cradle Roll work. The sermon was preached by Rev. S. P. Morgan, who took his text from Ezekiel 17:14. The afternoon session began at 2 o'clock with reports from the different committees. The nominating committee recommended C. C. White for president, W. H. Martin for vice-president and Mrs. H. W. Alexander for county organizer, with five beat organizers to assist her, all of whom were unanimously elected by the meeting. After an inspiring address on Junior and Primary work by Miss Minnie Brown, the president, Mr. White, addressed a few well-chosen words to the gathering. Mr. White was followed by Rev. R. H. G. Hewlett, who brought the meeting to a close.

COTTON SCHOOL AT GRENADA.

On Monday, August 6, there will be held at Grenada a county-wide cotton school. The purpose of this school is to more fully acquaint the members of the Mississippi Farm Bureau Cotton Association and others interested in the cooperative marketing of cotton with the details of the management, delivery, grading, accounting, receiving, shipping, warehousing, selling and making settlement for cotton delivered to the Association.

Among those who will be here to discuss these matters are H. E. Saveley, director of the field service department of the Mississippi Farm Bureau; W. C. Neal, sales manager of the Mississippi Farm Bureau Cotton Association, and Dr. Tait Butler, editor of the Progressive Farmer.

This meeting should be well attended, especially by members of the Association, as it is dealing with a system of marketing cotton very different from the one to which we have so long been accustomed. A few hours spent at this meeting may mean the saving of considerable time and worry this fall when times comes to deliver the cotton to the Association.

VARDAMAN LEAVES BILBO OUT

Telegram to Pontotoc Friends Puts Ex-Senator's Stamp of Approval on Bell and Franklin.

Yazoo City, July 20—What the forces of Lester C. Franklin, candidate for the Mississippi gubernatorial nomination say they regard as the most damaging document in the campaign to prospects of Theodore G. Bilbo, rival candidate, who had been bidding strongly for the old Vardaman vote, is a telegram from the former senator in which he says he has friends in the gubernatorial race—Lester C. Franklin and Percy Bell. The name of Bilbo is conspicuous by its absence.

The telegram was sent to C. W. Bolton of Pontotoc in answer to an invitation to former Senator Vardaman to address a political meeting there in May. It was sent from Birmingham where the former senator was in a sanitarium for treatment, being stricken with nephritis. It follows:

"Please advise my friends assembled there I appreciate their invitation to be with them and regret the impossibility of my attendance. My physican advises against excitement and exertion at this time. Without presuming to dictate your vote, I wish to state that both Bell and Franklin are my friends and capable men. Either will make you a good governor. May God bless you all."

The telegram was made public by the recipient, Mr. Bolton, a friend of former Senator Vardaman and a supporter of Mr. Franklin. Friends of the latter maintain that it will have much to do in killing Bilbo's chances to get in the second primary as he has been counting strongly on Vardaman faction support.

COUNTY EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETS

County Committee Adopts Regulations as to Who May and Who May Not Vote. Officers of Election Reminded that Law Requires that They Are Not to See Absent Voter Tickets. Officers to Hold the Primaries Named.

The Democratic executive committee of Grenada County met at the courthouse in Grenada Monday for the purpose of adopting regulations for the conduct of the primary election and the naming of officers to conduct the primaries, Aug. 7 and Aug. 28, and for such other business as properly came before it.

W. A. Winter, candidate for state senator for this and Yalobusha counties, was declared the nominee of Grenada County for that office, inasmuch as he has no opposition.

Silas Rayburn was declared the nominee for county surveyor; Wm. Penner was declared the nominee for justice of the peace, District 2; Kemp Mattingly, the nominee for supervisor, District 1. R. V. Pearson, a Confederate veteran, announced last Saturday for the office of treasurer, and was declared the nominee.

The constitutional amendment abolishing the office of county treasurer was carried at the last state election, but it has not yet been incorporated into the constitution, hence the matter is debatable as to just what attitude will be assumed by the law-making body as regards and treasurer that might be elected. Hence, Mr. Pearson, at the solicitation of a number of friends, concluded that he would make a try at the matter.

The following primary resolutions were adopted:

"The action of the state Democratic executive committee, the legally constituted mouthpiece of the party as regards prescribing the qualifications and conditions under which a primary election shall be held, adopted at the meeting held in the city of Jackson, Miss., June 19, is hereby ratified and approved:

"First—That only white Democrats shall participate in such primary election.

"Second—That no person shall participate in such primary unless he or she will be qualified to vote in the election for which the primaries are to be held (which qualification includes the payment on or before Feb. 1, 1923, of all taxes for which said person, whether male or female, was liable, for two years previous thereto), intends to support the nomination in which he or she participates, and has been in accord with the Democratic party for two years.

"Third—No person over 21 years of age and under 60 years of age shall be eligible to vote who has not paid poll taxes for the years 1921 and 1922, on or before Feb. 1, 1923, unless he or she is deaf and dumb, or blind, or maimed by the loss of hand or foot, or became 21 years of age within the said two years, and this regulation shall apply whether there has been an assessment of a poll tax by the county authorities or not.

"Fourth—That county executive committees are hereby directed to preserve the ballots of each and every voting precinct in their counties, together with a list of the voters who vote at said primary in the ballot boxes used at each precinct.

"Officers of the election are reminded that even though one's name appears on the poll books and they believe he or she is to be disqualified for any reason to participate in the primary, it is their duty to deny such person a ballot. The judges at any precinct, if they see proper, may allow any they believe to be disqualified, or anyone whose vote is justly challenged, to vote in an envelope, and it shall be the duty of the said officers of said precinct to write on the envelope the name of such voter and the reasons why said ballot is placed in an envelope.

"The judges of the election are reminded, in addition to the qualifications specifically named above, that the law requires a residence of two years in the state and a residence of one year in the county and election district where one offers to vote, except that ministers in actual charge of a church become qualified after a residence of six months in the county. One who will have been in

SECRECY OF ABSENT VOTER BALLOTS.

The judges and other officers of election are reminded that they, no more than anyone else, are expected to know how those casting an absent voter ballot vote. The law specifically provides this.

Officers of election are therefore instructed to open the envelopes containing absent voter ballots and drop them into the ballot box without even unfolding the ballot and to see that these ballots are so thoroughly mixed with other ballots as to make it impossible for one to determine how the voter has marked his preference. This is in exact accordance with the law.

VOTE BEFORE YOU LEAVE HOME

Absent Voter Ballots At Circuit Clerk's Office.

It is the duty of every good citizen to vote, and in order to accommodate those compelled to be away on election day, a law was passed providing for the Absent Voter. Tickets are now at the Circuit Clerk's office, and all who desire to do so, can vote before leaving home. The law requires that Absent Voter ballots be kept secret and the judges of an election have no more right to see them than they have any other ballot. The law requires that the envelope containing the ticket be opened and the ballot dropped in with the other tickets without ever being unfolded. The Executive Committee took notice of this fact and instruction with each box will show this.

Any one away from home can write the Circuit Clerk and get a ballot. Do not delay.

If T. P. Lamkin will call at Grenada Opera House, he will be given a free ticket to "Grumpy," featuring Theodore Roberts, which will be shown Aug. 2. Ticket good Aug. 2.

Dogan To The Voters of The County

Grenada, Miss., July 25, 1923.

To The People of Grenada County:

You were kind enough to me to elect me to fill the twenty months of the unexpired term as Sheriff of the late D. W. Beck. I was grateful. I have tried to show my appreciation of the confidence you reposed in me by making you an honest, faithful, diligent and accommodating officer. I am, as you know, a candidate before the Democratic primary in August for a full term, and if you again honor me with your suffrage and make me your Sheriff, I promise you the very best service that you have a right to demand and expect of a Sheriff.

I am no stranger to most of you. My private life and my record as a citizen, I think, show that I have always stood with the good people, and that no law violator can expect any official sympathy from me. I have been trained to stand for law enforcement, and as the years pass, I realize more and more that I have been wisely and correctly taught in that regard.

I am grateful for every kindness and for every consideration ever shown me, and especially since I have been your Sheriff. I ask a full term at your hands, and with the experience I have had, I ought to be able to serve you better than I have during the few months in which I have been entrusted with the office, and it shall be my constant endeavor to do so, if I am again elected.

I again thank you for your support in the past, and promise you if you elect me for the full term to do my dead level best at all times to make you a Sheriff that will meet every test of the thoughful, good citizen.

Gratefully, Yours,
DAVE W. DOGAN

"There's no peace and little rest for the one who suffers from a bad back, and distressing urinary disorders. Grenada people recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. Ask your neighbor. Be guided by their experience.

Mrs. W. A. Thompson, 632 Kershaw Street, Grenada, says: "My kidneys were in a terrible condition. They acted too often and caused annoyance. My back hurt all the time and I couldn't rest at night The doctor told me my kidneys were disordered. As I had a box of Doan's Kidney Pills I thought I would try them. They did just as represented in my case and two boxes cured me. I recommend Doan's willingly."

RUSH KNOX CATCHES BURCH IN DEBATE

Rush Knox, of Houston, Chickasaw County.

THEIR COMMENTS

Rush Knox: "Burch got out on a limb and I sawed it off."

Luther Burch: "He slipped up on me this time and I didn't have all my ammunition."

Farmer (reflecting sentiment of crowd): "When a fellow goes hunting, he ought to take along a LOADED gun."

Dentville, Miss., July 12.—Rush Knox took Copiah County by storm yesterday morning when at the close of a characteristic speech by Judge-Major Luther Burch, Mr. Knox mounted the platform, asked for a few minutes in which to answer attacks made on him and in a whirlwind address took the hide off of his perfumed opponent and hung it up to dry. Mr. Burch and his manager have been craving a joint debate. Yesterday Burch got it—and incidentally one of the worst drubbings which even a Mississippi political picnic has witnessed in a long time.

Mr. Burch started off a day full of political speaking by addressing the huge crowd of picknickers at 10:30 a.m., making his usual campaign speech. Toward its close in discussing the subject of trusts and combines the speaker said that while he was not calling names, there was a candidate in the race, the first letter of whose name was Rush Knox; that this gentleman bragged that he had been district attorney of the Third District for 13 years and was merely seeking promotion; and that Mr. Knox had never brought suit against the oil mills in his district which formed an iniquitous trust and combine.

Rush Knox Replies.

Rush Knox, who was in the audience, requested time to answer, mounted the platform and in a whirlwind address riddled his opponent by declaring:

"There is today not a single oil mill in my district. Mr. Burch has accused me of neglecting my duty because my brother was manager of an oil mill in my district. That little mill, organized by some farmers, is at Pontotoc, in another district entirely over which I have no control at all. Burch did not know I was in this crowd when he got wound up awhile ago," continued Mr. Knox. "I believe he knew there were no mills within my jurisdiction when he spoke."

"Mr. Knox, after declaring that he had a farm from which he sold 52 bales of cotton last year, pictured the condition of the farmers if the local oil mills that were in the state should be driven out and the farmers forced to throw their seed away as in days gone by. He declared that the American Cotton Oil Company had sold its last holdings in Mississippi and the Buckeye was leaving and only local companies were left and none of these were in his district.

Burch Gets What He Wanted.

"Luther Burch has been wanting a joint debate," continued Mr. Knox. "This morning he has gotten his wish gratified. He has gotten out on a limb and I am sawing it off." Then amid the shouts of the crowd Mr. Knox turned on his opponent who sat a few feet away by the side of Ex-Governor Bilbo and said, "Burch, how long did you run a bucket shop and a skating rink in Newton?" "Never!" shouted Burch. "I called the man a liar the other day who said it." "Get my grip," said the speaker "and I will put Mr. Burch's word up against—not my own, for I do not know, but up against that of seven honorable and respcted citizens of Newton. Whereupon Mr. Knox, digging a paper from the bottom of his satchel read as follows:

"Newton, Miss., July 2, 1923.

"To whom it may concern:

"We, the undersigned citizens of Newton, certify that Luther M. Burch did at one time operate in this town what is known as a bucket shop for the purpose of trading in cotton futures, either for his own account or others. Also that he did operate a skating rink. Signed: T. A. Baucum; J. C. McClinton; E. T. Abney; C. A. Bolton; C. W. Carr; W. B. Richardson; J. W. Goodson."

Burch's Rejoiner.

In his rejoinder Mr. Burch declared that he had worked for Joseph Newburger as a telegraph operator; that he was a poor man and a young man and that the place was affiliated with the New York Exchange. Mr. Burch admitted that he did run a skating rink and added: "I didn't mean any harm by it."

Mr. Burch read a letter addressed to Governor Russell by Rush Knox in which the aggressive district attorney requested a pardon for a negro sent to the pen for murder. In the letter, which Burch made much over, Mr. Knox declared that the negro was indicted late in the term and he made him plead guilty in order to get court adjourned, but had since gotten the idea that he is not guilty.

Mr. Knox, in a two-minute rebuttal, pointed out that a special venire of 300 men would have been necessary to try this man; that the cost to the county would have been great and that he did therefore get the negro to plead guilty. Later he said over 300 citizens requested him to join in an effort to get a pardon circumstances having developed which showed the negro innocent. Mr. Knox then turned his attention to the long drawn out criminal trials, and said: "A few of these criminal lawyers like Burch are the ones who are bankrupting the counties with these long trials, which are expensive luxuries. Take the case of that Syrian in Jackson, indicted for killing a white girl. While Burch had a right to defend him, yet he almost broke the counties where the case was tried before he finally got his client into the asylum when he ought to have been hung. I say to you that as your next attorney general, I am going to try to conserve the legal expenses of the state just as I have been trying to do for 13 years."

From the re-echoing applause of the crowd and the constant comment of those present, it is evident that Mr. Knox scored a victory over Burch similar to that over his other opponent, Clayton D. Potter, at Starkville, when he forced that gentleman to admit that Frank Roberson offered to resign solely on condition that Governor Russell would appoint Potter to succeed him and that this was the same Roberson whom Russell and his cohorts had accued of being the willing tool of the trusts and combines, now retained, according to Russell, at a salary of $25,000 a year.

Burch today read the rest of this week's speaking date to Mr. Knox, and asked him to accompany him, but, after listening to the places, Knox retorted: "They are already for me at those places." Mr. Burch stated on the picnic grounds after the speaking, that "He slipped up on me this time and I didn't have all my ammunition," to which an old farmer rejoined that when a fellow is going hunting, it's a good thing to take a loaded gun.

LESSON FOR JULY 29

MATTHEW, THE PUBLICAN

LESSON TEXT — Matthew 9:9-13; Luke 5:27-32.

GOLDEN TEXT—"I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance."—Matthew 5:32.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Mark 2: 13-22.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Matthew Invites Jesus to His Home.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Jesus Did for Matthew.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Matthew Overcomes a Handicap.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Matthew, a Study of Conversion.

I. Who Matthew Was.

Of Matthew little is known, even his birth place is concealed. Our first sight of him is seated at the toll booth collecting taxes. The tax gatherer was hated by the loyal Jews because he collected taxes for the alien government under whose yoke they were galling. This hate was the more bitter because of the extortion usually practiced by those in rule. From the meager accounts we find that Matthew was:

1. A Man of Decision. We do not know whether he had ever seen or heard of Jesus before this time, but we note that he at once arose and followed Jesus. Without doubt, there were many things to concern him. It was no little task to break off from his business which apparently was very lucrative.

2. He Was a Humble Man. In chapter 10, verse 3, the order in which he gives his own name and the fact that he designates himself a "publican" would show that he did not overestimate himself.

3. He Possessed Force of Character. This is shown in the fact that he gave a feast and invited his friends in to see and hear his Lord.

He had two names, Levi, which means "attached" or "joined," and Matthew, which means "gift of Jehovah." Most likely Matthew was the name assumed after his conversion.

II. Matthew's Call or Conversion (Math. 9:9).

1. As Jesus Passed By, He "Saw a Man." He saw the possibilities which were in Matthew. He saw through the hated profession of a tax gatherer the shining possibilities of his manhood and apostleship. He saw in him the man fit to perceive and portray the Messiahship of the Redeemer. The divine grace was revealed in this call. Jesus sees what is in man regardless of name or profession.

2. Matthew's Response (v. 9). He acted with decision and promptness; he left his business behind him. When Jesus said, "Follow Me," Matthew perceived that greater than man had spoken to him. May we yield ourselves unto Him and render such simple obedience that our actions may be but the echoes of the divine voice in commanding. Two things in Matthew's compliance prove the genuineness of his conversion:

1. "He Left All" (Luke 5:28). Real conversion always results in the forsaking of all that is contrary to Jesus, such as illegitimate business, wicked associates and worldly pleasures, etc.

2. "Followed Jesus." Following Jesus means the commitment of one's life to Him for full salvation, abandonment of the will to Him to do whatsoever He wills, and a willingness to suffer, and even die, if need be, for Him.

III. Matthew Made a Great Feast (Luke 5:29-32).

This feast was made in honor of his newly-found Savior. His conversion was so real that he wanted his friends to become acquainted with his Savior. He was not ashamed to confess his Lord before them. He showed real tact in making a supper. Men will come to a feast much more readily than they will to a sermon. A great company of sinners came, who doubtless had been Matthew's companions in sin. He now desired them to become his brothers in Christ. The Scribes and Pharisees were astonished that Jesus would appear in company with such a motley crowd of disreputable persons. They were too cowardly to speak to Jesus but they came to the disciples. Jesus championed their cause and battled His adversaries. His reasoning was unanswerable. A physician's place is among the sick. Only those who are diseased should come to the doctor's house. Since spiritual matters are of more importance than physical, Jesus was more than justified in being in the center of those who were morally sick that He might heal them of their maladies. He came to call sinners to repentance.

Our Conscience.

Pat—Rather. But who's that on your back?

Why Calling Is Going Out.

"Last year," said the minister, "I made 400 parish calls."

"You did!" exclaimed a church member.

"Yes," replied the parson, "and of that 400 I found six persons at home—and four of them were ill."

Sleeping Sickness Fly of Africa

How Method of Fighting This Pest Inspired Manufacture of Sweet Dreams Mosquito Remedy.

A traveler in relating his various experiences in Africa, casually mentioned how the natives protected themselves against the ravages of the Tsetse fly. As is generally known, the bite of this fly results in "sleeping sickness," a malady from which an unfortunate seldom recovers.

It was reasoned that a remedy capable of keeping off these flies would also keep mosquitoes off. So in America this remedy was reproduced as nearly as possible. Having been found exceptionally satisfactory as a mosquito remedy, this mixture has since been offered in commerce under the trade name of Sweet Dreams. The efficiency of the preparation has caused its immediate acceptance everywhere.

And the traveler doesn't yet know that his entertaining story resulted in the birth of an industry.

When mosquitoes are troublesome try Sweet Dreams. Red-top bottles sold everywhere 35c or 3 bottles for $1.00.

THE REIGN OF DISHONESTY.

In January 1916 the tax levy for all state purposes was six mills and the property valuation low. Since then the property valuation for taxation has been arbitrarily raised 250 per cent and the tax payers are paying five times as much tax as when the Bilbo administration began.

During the past seven years the state has been compelled to issue many millions of dollars in bonds to cover the current expenses of the government. If the tax rate had paid the current expenses it would have been necessary for the enormous rate to have been raised still higher. So in spite of the great increase the taxes have not paid the operating expenses of the state and the people have also been burdened with an extravagant bond issue for current expenses. If this condition of affairs is permitted to continue it will bankrupt the state.

In addition we find that every enterprise, new educational institutions, hospitals, Gulfport Centennial or great improvements, have not been paid for with the increased tax rate money but by enormous bond issues that will have to be paid by the tax payers of the future.

Extravagance and waste have run riot during the administration of Bilbo and Russell and they have had an utter disregard for the burdens of the tax payers or the law. Graft and corruption have been the regular order of business under both administrations.

We could burden our readers with specific instances of graft and immorality that have looted the treasury, disgraced the state and debauched the institutions but we hardly believe this necessary after reading in so many other papers the charges brought against the present governor by Judge C. P. Long and hearing a member of the legislature publicly denounce many loathsome incidents exposed at the Insane Hospital investigation during Bilbo's administration.

We are confident that the women of Mississippi will need no further proof in order to break up this condition of affairs in our state.

This shameful regime is now trying to perpetuate itself upon the people of Mississippi and is conducting a campaign of fraud, falsehood and deceit unsurpassed by anything that ever took place in the state before.

When the newspapers undertake to expose the deceit and falsehood in the campaigns the pet method of these politicians is to detract attention from the main issues by howling "subsidized press", and accusing all the newspapers of the state of being factional. When the opponents of this regime try to explain the real condition of affairs to the public then they are accused of mud slinging.

This bold bunch of grafters have severely denounced The Woman Voter saying that we violated our non-partisan policy. When a struggle is going on between right and wrong, honesty and dishonesty, corruption and immorality on one side and decency and good government on the other, there is no such thing as non-partisanship. It becomes a question of decency and right as opposed to falsehood, injustice and wrong. We will not hesitate to openly appeal to the women of Mississippi to help clean up the state and work for better government, a cleaner moral atmosphere for the rising generation to grow up in and a greater and more prosperous Mississippi.—Woman Voter.

RUSSELL CAMPAIGNING FOR FRANKLIN.

If Franklin ever had any chance to be Governor of Mississippi, it was knocked into a cocked hat by the oft-proclaimed support of Lee Mary Russell. But if anything were necessary to give his campaign the final knock-out drops, Russell furnished it this week by starting on a speech-making campaign for Franklin. Poor Franklin. Russell does not know how dead he is, and he does not know how many thousands of people in Mississippi who may have voted for him who would take great delight in doing what he does not want done.

With Mike Conner, the people can count on better business methods in the management of the State's affairs; in the near future lower taxes; more enterprises that will help pay the taxes and give employment to laboring men; better marketing conditions for the farmers and a more prosperous and a more contented people. If you do not want this, then don't vote for Mike Conner. If you want to perpetuate what has befouled the State for the past eight years; vote with those who are turning their mud batteries on Mike Conner.

IS IT ANY OF YOUR BUSINESS?

Is it any of your business about how the state government is run, or who your tax fixing and public money spending officials are? "Yes," you will answer at once with that boast so often shown by an American citizen. But does your action square with your words?

About tax-paying time, people raise the devil and Tom Walker about "high taxes," yet when it comes to voting, few, very few, vote for men who are to fix their tax levies and who have to do with managing the business of the State and spending the money taken from the tax payers because of their experience, or because of their peculiar fitness. The running of the State government is a big proposition. The head of the State government in a great measure has to do with and directs the spending of about $25,000,000; in other words, the Governor of the State is placed at the head of the business that belongs to the people and which takes about $25,000,000 at the present time to operate.

If you, Mr. or Mrs. Voter or Miss Voter, were going to employ some one to look after your private business of even a few thousand dollars, and were required to keep the one whom you employed four years, would you not look him over very carefully, and would you not feel that you ought to be dead sure that he had shown his fitness to do what you were employing him to do?

Now this applies to every office in some respect, but especially to tax levying and money spending officials and most especially the Governor.

The carelessness and the indifference so many people manifest sometimes in indicating their preferences for men for public office, reminds us of the man who declined to dance with a freckled faced, snaggled toothed old maid, but was quickly vamped by a sister who talked through her nose and who wore a wig and had a glass eye.

cussion of the State's affairs. No man could have made the tax problems plainer. He gave his record on various and sundry things in the legislature to show that his record squared with his campaign promises. He condemned the factionalism that had beset the state for a number of years and pointed out how this factionalsim had injured the business condition of Mississippi; how it had affected the farmer, the laboring man and every other calling. He said if made Governor, that every man would have a square deal. That when it came to attending to the public business, he would know no man, and that the people who voted against him would get the same treatment that those who voted for him would. By this he said he did not mean that when he had appointments to make, that he would not give his friends every consideration but what he did mean was that he would consider first honesty, competency and effidiency. He apologized to the audience, especially the ladies, for having to mention Bilbo but he said that it became necessary to skin a skunk, and that it seems that that job was falling to him as Prof. Whitfield and Judge Bell were staying very beautifully in the middle of the road. He impressed the audience with his earnestness, with his ability and his fairness, and the almost unanimous verdict is that he made one of the most practical and statesmanlike appeals that has been heard here for a long while. Certain it is that he showed that he is no trimmer. In discussing what Bilbo and what Russell had fastened on the State during the past eight years, he said that he was not appealing to factionalism, but he was seeking to show the people the result of factionalsim, and that he felt that it was somebody's duty to carry a message about the rottenness at the State Capitol to the people. He said that Prof. Whitfield seemed to prefer to steer clear of anything and everybody that might provoke opposition and that it appeared that that gentleman thought that generalities without specifications on anything, was the right way to make a campaign. Mr. Conner said that if nobody ever carried the truth to the people about the records of these men, he asked how were the great body of the people to know it.

Mr. Conner said that he and he almost alone in this campaign was being assailed by these men, and that he was fighting them in the good name of his State with all the power and the ability he has. He therefore thought that if he was doing the main fighting for decency and for good government that he was entitled to the support of those people in the State who wanted to get rid of Bilbo-Russellism. He said that he wanted nobody to vote for him under a misapprehension; that he had told the people and was still telling what he would do as Governor, and if they believed in his honesty and that he would do what he said, he wanted their votes. He said that he loved his State and that he knew that almost all the people wanted a clean government and believed that the offices of the State should be filled by men and women who would regard their oaths and who would think first of the welfare of the public rather than of selfish ends.

His audience gave the most earnest attention and stayed with him through his whole speech. When he had finished Bilbo's political hide was dangling on a limb and Lee Russell and Franklin were shown to be the Siamese twins of the campaign. His references to Prof. Whitfield and to Judge Bell were all in the way of pleasantries.

Many ladies openly announced their preferences for him and he made many new converts among the men.

The aggressive speaker declared that the man who now questions his partriotism is the same man whose political life began in bribery and ended in a scandal in the Insane Asylum and who now seeks to score a come-back through the jail house. He declared that Bilbo alone of all the candidates had injected the war records as an issue, thus seeking to turn attention away from the slimy trail which Bilbo left behind him during his twelve years in public life.

"Bilbo declares my two brothers did less than their duty. I say that one brother holds an honorable discharge from the army and the other was married like Bilbo. As for myself I am the only candidate in this race who has shown the people an unconditional offer to volunteer in any capacity. I did my duty as the government called on every man to do and as I believe every man in this race did so. It is strange that with ex-service men introducing me everywhere I go and numbers of them for me that Bilbo of all people should make the principal plank in his platform "Mike Conner."

Why Bilbo Hates Conner

"But Bilbo's animosity toward me is easily understood" declared Mr. Conner. "He hates me because I have stood between him and the people.

"My fellow citizens, I began cleaning up Mississippi with the asylum and with your aid I want to finish the job as your Governor."

"I long to see Mississippi resume her proud place in this sisterhood of states. I long for the time when we will have driven these political money changers from the Capitol and when that splendid building will be rededicated to the service of the people. Bilbo hates me because I have not hesitated to take up the gauntlet when he has attacked the high toned decent men and women of Mississippi."

He cited his record in the legislature to show that his campaign promises squared with what he had tried to do.

In discussing the difficulties that beset the country, he specially referred to the farmer and his inability to get a fair market value for his products. He said that the Marketing law which he got though the legislature, had partisan politics not prevented getting funds to make it function, would have set in motion things to standardize the farmer's products, and he believed would have soon put the Mississippi farmer at least near where a similar law had placed the farmers of California—that is where only 2 per cent of the farmers owe under a mortgage. He said that 85 per cent of Mississippi farmers sleep under a mortgaged roof.

He said that the State ought to have an auditing system, and that he introduced and got passed a law providing an audit in the last session but that Russell vetoed it.

He said that he was in favor of a system whereby the State could buy supplies for all its institutions at wholesale, and that he had advocated such a thing six years ago, and that all the candidates for Governor are now on that platform.

He stated that he was the superintendent of the Sunday School of his church and that he had been for ten years, but that he wanted no votes, would scorn them, because of his church or lodge affiliations. He was asking for the votes of the people, he said, upon the grounds of his knowledge of and intimacy with State affairs, and that upon the grounds that he had filled a more important office than any of his opponents outside of the jail bird,

TO THE VOTERS OF GRENADA COUNTY:

On account of official duties, I find it impossible to make a close canvass for the office of CIRCUIT CLERK, therefore, I take this method to notify you that I would appreciate very much your vote and influence in the August primary.

I am now filling a short unexpired term. It has been the Democratic custom in such cases to re-elect the office-holder, provided he is competent and has faithfully discharged the duties of the office. If my record meets with your approval, I feel that I deserve a full term. Vote for men whom you think are able and competent to render the best public service.

Thanking you for the many favors shown me in the past, and assuring you, if re-elected, that I will be a servant of all the people. Gratefully yours,

Grenada, Miss., July 18, 1923. V. R. JAMES

Dave W. Dogan

He has made you a diligent and capable Sheriff for 20 months and He asks a full term at the hands of the good people of Grenada County.

He never turns a deaf ear to the needy or distressed. Among the first at the bedside of the sick and among the last to leave in time of distress.

He asks a fair and just consideration of his character and of his record as a citizen.

He has captured and broken up 27 stills during his 20 months of service in the office, nearly ten times as many as all other Sheriffs for the past 10 years. He asks that His record as a breaker up of stills be compared with that of Sheriffs of adjoining Counties which are larger than Grenada County and which have more evidence of stills

He knows that the people of Grenada County want to be fair in all things and that they will be when they have the facts. Ask those who have known Dave Dogan from his boyhood about him.

He believes that an officer, no less than a private citizen, should be just as considerate of the less influential and humble citizen as of the supposedly more potential. He has tried to make the people of Grenada County a good Sheriff and is being told by Hundreds that he has.

He will try to improve on what he has done, if elected for the full term and would be an ungrateful man if he did not.

CHAPTER XX

Molly Mine.

Sandy, replacing the blanket on Wyatt's face, examined his guns and started climbing up to the big bowlder. Soon he discovered the narrow opening and proceeded cautiously.

To Sandy's right was perpendicular rock, to his left the curve of the [illegible] bowlder with the scrub cedar clinging to it, withered in the cleft that had first nourished, then denied it nourishment. It gleamed silver gray, attracting his attention. As he gazed his sharp ears caught the tiny crack of a brittle branch. Instantly he dropped to all fours as a spurt of flame showed from the tree and a bullet whined over him, to smack against the rock and fall flattened.

Sandy did not move. He knew that, to the man firing, his fall might have seemed a hit, that he had beaten the missile by the space of a wink. He heard more broken boughs, as if his assailant were clumsily, assuredly, clambering out of ambush, and he shifted silently into position, rifle set down, both guns ready. There came a strange thrashing sound, a groan of mortal anguish, silence. If this was a trick, it was a crude one. Sandy waited. That groan, half sigh, half rattle, could not be mistaken. He half circled the bowlder, gliding up a flattened traverse, and saw, lying outspread over a low bough of the withered tree, face to the moon, gun away from the curling hand, Butch Parsons.

With ready gun Sandy reached him, bent, turned him on his side. A bullet had ranged through both hips, shattering them. The spine must have been injured. There were puddles of blood that told the injury was some hours old. Butch had lain there paralyzed, passed by Brandon's men as dead, lingering like the traditional snake until sunset to see and recognize Sandy coming through the gap, to use his last remnant of life to pull trigger and so to die, the injured vertebrae giving away to the effort, the spark of life pinched out.

Sandy left him and returned to the gap. He could still read sign, plain as it was on every side. He found the side-gulch, saw the cabin, saw Hahn's saddle horse grazing free, Blaze in the corral, the cabin door open with the moon streaming in. He had pieced out the puzzle to his own satisfaction. Brandon and his men had arrived and, in Hereford, they had run across Wyatt, procuring horses there and saving themselves the trip to Three Star. Butch's body was evidence that they had not been unsuccessful, Wyatt's that the fight had not been all one-sided, the surprise not perfect. And, if Plimsoll had been warned, what had become of Molly?

He got an answer that made his heart stand still, then pound in a rush of action. On the floor, in the beam of the moon, lay the luck-piece, a few links of gold chain attached to the coin. Stooping for it, he brushed a strand of brown hair. Then he saw Grit's body beneath the table. Fury boiled in him, chilled to icy wrath and determination. He put away the coin and hauled out the dog's body into the moonlight. It was limber and still warm. Sandy rose from his squat and swiftly examined the cabin. He discovered a lantern with oil in it, which he lit. He had no fear of interruption. Before very long Sam and the Three Star riders would be along. The sight of Blaze suggested that Molly was not far away. If she had gone, by force, or her own free will, the probability was that her own mount and saddle would have been requisitioned.

He found warm water in a kettle; he had the first-aid kit with its bandages, iodine, lint. And, above all, he had Keith's silver flask, half full. He did not fail to note the empty bottles on the table, the blood marks where Plimsoll's veins had sprinkled and Grit had stained the floor. He found, too, a button of horn with a fragment of black and white check, torn from Molly's riding coat in the struggle. Sandy's anger crystalized into one ambition beyond the finding of Molly, and that was to kill Plimsoll, if possible with his hands. He pictured the struggle between the gambler and the girl, desperate on one side, brutal on the other, and, whether the stake had been won or lost, he resolved that Plimsoll should die for that attack.

Now his hope hung on Grit. He took the collie's head on his lap and examined the blow made by the butt of Plimsoll's gun. It had laid bare the bone but he did not think it either splintered or fractured. Sandy knew that dog or wolf or coyote will lie in a torpor after being badly wounded and often recover slowly, waking from the recuperating sleep revitalized. But, if he could bring Grit back, he must make fresh demands on him.

He washed the wound on the head and poured iodine into it. He did the same with the hole in the leg, cleansing it from the dried blood and hair. It had stopped bleeding. He disinfected it, stitched it, closed it, bound it with adhesive tape and strengthened it with a bandage adjusted as expertly as any surgeon could have done. He pried open the jaws with but little resistance and let the tongue slip back before he poured in a measure of Scotch and water between the canine and incisor teeth. For a moment there was no response, then Grit coughed, choked, swallowed. Sandy repeated the dose with less water. It went down naturally. Almost immediately he felt the heart stroke strengthen. Grit sneezed, opened his eyes and feebly thumped his tail as he licked Sandy's hand.

"Grit, ol' pardner," said Sandy seriously, the dog's head between his hands, "yo're sure mussed up a heap an' I hate to do it, but I got to call on you, son. Mebbe it won't be such a long trick, but I can't git by without yore nose, Grit. It's worth more'n all I've got. An' I know yo're game."

Grit wagged his tail more vigorously and tried to get on his feet, but Sandy prevented him until the third dose was administered. Then he carried the dog outside to save him every foot of unnecessary progress, and set him down. The collie stood up, wabbly on one foot but able to stand, looking eagerly at Sandy, commencing to snuff the air. Sandy let him smell the coin, the strand of hair, the piece of cloth and, with his keenest sense stimulated with the perfume that stood to Grit for love, the dog wrinkled his nose and cast around. But he led direct to Blaze and stood by the horse uncertain while Blaze nosed down at him.

"Carried out of the cabin, son," said Sandy. "We'll guess at Plimsoll. He's got clear of the locality. Blaze knows but he can't tell. We've got to cast about." He picked up the dog again, puzzled, and looked about him in the gulch, suffused with moonlight. "There sh'ud be soft dirt under those asps, let's give a look-see there."

They had not gone five feet into the trees before man and dog made a simultaneous discovery. For Sandy it was a heel-mark left by Plimsoll, treading heavily under his burden, a slight depression enough, but plain to Sandy. Grit began to struggle in his arms. Molly's hair or body must have brushed against lower boughs at the same height that Sandy carried the wounded Grit and the scent still clung.

"They c'udn't go fur in this direction by the looks of the place, Grit," said Sandy. "See what you can make of it." He put him down by the heel-print. Grit uttered a low growl deep back in his throat, his ruff lifted. He started off, hobbling along, leading truly over rock or sand, into the cove where the split rock lay, its crevice black, the vine curving down into it like a serpent. Where Plimsoll had laid her down Grit halted and raised his head, his tongue playing in and out of his jaws in his triumphant excitement, his eyes luminous, his tail waving like the plume of a knight. Sandy gently patted him, pressed him down to a crouch.

"Down charge, Grit," he whispered in his ear. "You've got it. You stay here." Sandy had left his rifle at the cabin when he carried Grit out, now he spun the two cylinders of his Colts, lowered himself into the split, holding on to the vine, looking straight into Grit's lambent eyes.

"Stay here, son," he said softly, and Grit licked the face now on a level with his own. "I'll be back."

Sandy had adventured more dangerous chances than this. He felt his legs dangle into space and his hands found a curving loop in the vine trunk that sagged slightly under his weight. Extended at full length, his toes touched bottom. Letting go, he dropped lightly and stood in blackness, the crevice above him showing a strip of azure light.

There was only the sound of dripping water. He ventured a match, holding it at arm's length in his left hand, flicking friction with his nail, an old trick. The match caught and began to blaze instantly in the still air. Low down, and to the right, there showed a stab of flame, the roar of an exploding cartridge, the reek of high-powered gas seemed to fill the cavern. The bullet passed through Sandy's coat sleeve. If he had held the match in front of him he would have been shot through heart or lungs. His right-hand gun barked from his hip, straight for where the flame had showed, then to right of it, to left, above, his left-hand gun joining in the merciless probe. No second shot came in answer.

Sandy lit another match. Its flare showed him a sandy floor, slightly sloping, moist in one place, a charred stick almost at his feet. It was a pine knot, half burned, and he lighted it easily, advancing toward the spot where he had flung the shots he knew had silenced whoever had fired at the first match. He found Hahn, crumpled up, shot through the right arm and a thigh, besides the other wound in his shoulder.

Sandy turned him over, brought Keith's flask into play. Hahn looked up at him and essayed a grin.

"Yo're game all right, Hahn," said Sandy. "You ain't the man I was lookin' fo', but you fired first. I see I wasn't the first to plug you. Mebbe I can fix you up a bit?"

Hahn shook his head.

"'Twouldn't be a mite of use," he said huskily. "No grudge against you, Sandy. I thought you one of Brandon's gang. They got Butch and me an' they're chasin' Jim Plimsoll to hell and gone—over Nipple peaks—if he beats 'em to Spur rock he'll fool 'em on the black—I couldn't ride—he left me here—with the girl—but the case is empty and the bank's bu'sted—cashing—in—time and no chips."

He was wandering in his mind, speaking without control, but Sandy's mouth tightened at the mention of Nipple Peaks, relaxed again on the word "girl." He gave Hahn the last few drops of whisky. The dealer coughed violently, collapsed, shuddered, writhed a little and was still before he could answer Sandy's eager question about Molly.

He found her without much searching, rolled down a little slope beyond the crevice. Under the light of the torch her eyes looked up at him. Her hair was in disorder, her raiment torn, her slender body wound about by the lariat rope, her mouth and chin hidden by the tightly drawn bandanna, but her gaze, reflecting the flare of the pine knot, held so much of welcome, of faith, of pride and courage, all sourced in something deeper, far more wonderful, moving beneath the surface like a well spring, that Sandy's heart swelled with glad emotion, knowing she was unharmed, knowing that his coming was no surprise, however welcome.

He found himself trembling as he untied her bonds and took away the gag from the mouth that lifted to his. She snuggled into his arms and, as the torch sputtered out, leaving them in the darkness, save for the luminous beams that stole down from where Grit whimpered in joyous impatience,

"Sandy, I Knew You'd Come in Time," She Whispered.

her hair showered down over both of them,

"Sandy. I knew you'd come in time!" she whispered.

He held her close and hard for a tense moment that gave all his world to his embrace.

"Molly—girl," he said brokenly, his voice broken with passion.

Her hand crept up and a soft palm cupped about his chin. He kissed the edge of it. He rose easily, still holding her and lifted her high to where she could reach the vine, swinging up after her, Grit dancing a three-legged reel of joy as they came up into the free air and the moonlight.

Blaze greeted them in the corral. Molly mounted, and Sandy set Grit on the saddle in front of her.

"Where's Pronto?" she asked.

He told her.

"I figger Sam an' the boys'll be erlong soon," he said. "They may meet up with Pronto. Anyway, they'll likely bring Goldie fo' me. She's up. An' Pronto'll be too tired fo' what I want him to do ternight."

She sensed the change in his voice, intuitively guessed but, womanlike, asked:

"What do you mean, Sandy? Aren't you coming home with me to Three Star? If it wasn't so far I'd love to go back just like this, without meeting anybody."

"Plimsoll's makin' fo' Nipple peaks an' he's likely to git clear. Me, I aim to head him off an' settle the account."

"Sandy." There was a plea in her voice that plucked at his heart strings. "He didn't harm me, Sandy."

"He tried to."

Her hand slipped to his shoulder, touched his cheek. She reined in Blaze. Sandy stood beside her, straight and stern, his eyes implacable.

"He ain't fit to live," he went on. "I w'udn't be fit to go back to Three Star where yore daddy lies an' know he was there in his grave while I let that coyote go loose. What w'ud you think of me if I let him slide?"

"I know," she answered.

A horse whinnied from down the ravine. Blaze answered.

"That'll be Sam an' the boys, Molly." He cupped hands and sounded a "Yahoo!"

The answer came back clear through the evening, multiplied by the rocks about them.

"I'm afraid," she said.

"Afraid?"

"I know. I never was before. But . . ." She broke off, leaned swiftly down from the saddle and kissed him.

"Come back to me soon, Sandy," she said.

CHAPTER XXI

The End of the Rope.

Pronto had chosen his own trail and gait back to the Three Star. It was Goldie that Sandy rode under the stars toward Nipple peaks. He was alone, refusing any company of Sam or the riders. Molly's last kiss had been the key that turned in the lock of his heart and opened up to reality the garden of his dreams where the two of them would walk together, work together all their days. It could have meant nothing else. And she had been afraid—for him. Plimsoll living was a blot upon the fair page of happiness. Though Molly, thank God, had come through unharmed, to Sandy the touch of Plimsoll was a defilement that could only be wiped out by his death.

As he rode over the finny ridge of Elk mountain and saw the Nipple peaks gleaming above the black pines across the valley, with Elk river gleaming in the middle, he realized that he had said nothing to Molly of Keith, of the shutting down of the mine and his own action in her name. While she had asked nothing of young Donald. For the time it had been as if the rest of the world had been fenced off from them and their own intimate affairs.

He compressed his knees and the mare answered in a lope that stretched into a gallop, fast and faster as she reached the levels and sped toward Elk river. Sandy was not going to waste time looking for a ford. The mare could swim. He scanned the mountain toward the peaks, passed over the dark impenetrable pines, surveyed the stretch of gently rising ground between the Elk and the trees and shifted his guns in their scabbards. His rifle he had left with Sam. Either Plimsoll had not passed the peaks, was in the woods, or he had come and gone. Something told Sandy this last had not occurred. Travel beyond the peaks must have been hard and slow and roundabout for Plimsoll while he had tangented fast for the cut-off.

The mare took the cold river water about her fetlocks with a little shiver, wading in to the girths, sliding to a deep pool where she had to swim a few strokes before she found gravel under her hoofs and scrambled out. Suddenly, while Sandy hesitated how best to arrange his patrol, a horse came floundering out of the pines less than a quarter of a mile away, a black horse, shining with sweat, tired to its limit, staggering in its stride, the rider hunched in the saddle more like a sack of meal than a man.

Before Sandy could turn the mare toward them three riders burst from the trees like bolts from a crossbow, spurring their mounts, the two in the lead swinging lariats. They divided, one to either side of the foundering black stallion, one at the rear, gaining, angling in. The ropes slithered out, the loops seemed to hang like suspended rings of wire for a second before they settled down, fair and true, about the neck and shoulders of the black's rider. They tightened, the lariats snubbed to the saddle horns, the horses sliding with flattened pasterns. The black hanging on, pitched forward as if relieved of a sudden weight and its rider jerked hideously from the saddle, hands clawing at the rope that choked his gullet, wrenching sinking deep, shutting off air and light with a horrid taste of blood and the noise of thundering waters.

The ropers wheeled their mounts and galloped back toward the woods, the limp body of their victim dragging, bouncing over the ground. The third rode to meet Sandy. It was Brandon. He hailed Sandy with surprise.

"How'd you happen here this time of night, Bourke? Not looking for me?"

"No. I was looking for the man you've just caught. I was about a minute too late."

Brandon glanced curiously at Sandy, caught by the grim note in his voice. But he made no comment.

"Sorry if I spoiled your private vendetta, Bourke. You can have him, what's left of him, if you want. We were going to swing him from a tree with a card on his chest presenting him to Hereford county, with our compliments. As it is, Bourke, I'd be relieved if you'd keep out of this entirely. Even forgetting you'd met us. We're within our rights, but we've done some cleaning up tonight that we might have to explain if we stayed too long in the state. We got the goods on Plimsoll; one of his men whose girl Plimsoll had stolen helped us to pin them on him. We met him at Hereford. I'm going to send the facts and proofs to your authorities. They may not approve of lynch law these days, but they wouldn't act—and we did. I don't fancy they'll bother us any. He wasn't worth the ropes he spoiled. Just as well you kept out of the mix-up."

Sandy said nothing. There was no need to mention Molly's adventure.

"Want to be sure it's him" asked Brandon.

The body of Plimsoll lay at the foot of a big pine. The loops were still tight about his neck. One of the ropes had been tossed over a bough. The two men had dismounted. They nodded to Sandy as he came up with Brandon. They were horse owners, responsible men, who considered they had administered justice, who felt no more qualms concerning the dead man than if his body had been the carcass of a slaughtered steer.

"Waiting for the rest of the boys to come up," said Brandon. "We'll hit the trail home tonight. Bourke wants to identify the body, boys."

Sandy looked down at the contorted, blackened face, and his disappointment at having been forestalled, sedimented down. The gambler's features had not been made placid by death; they still held much of the horror of the last moments of that relentless chase, his horse falling under him, foreknowledge of sudden death and then the whistling ropes, the jerk into eternity . . .! It was a thing to be forgotten, a nightmare that had nothing to do with the new day ahead.

"It's Plimsoll," said Sandy shortly. "I'm ridin' back to Three Star. I found him hangin' to a tree. Good night, hombres." He left them standing about their quarry and turned the willing mare toward home. Peace settled down on him under the stars that were fading, the moon below the hills when he rode into the home corral.

A figure was perched upon the fence, waiting. It was Molly, and she leaped down almost into his arms as he sprang from the mare. In the gray dawn her face seemed drawn and weary. There were the blue shadows under the eyes that he remembered seeing there the time they had ridden over the Pass of the Goats. She came close to him, her hands up against his chest.

A Figure Was Perched Upon the Fence, Waiting.

"You're safe, Sandy. Safe!"

"I was too late," he said. "Brandon's men had been ahead of me."

"I'm so glad, Sandy. Your hands are clean of his blood. They are my hands now, Sandy."

He swept her up to him, kissing her mouth and eyes, the eager pressure of her lips returning all with full measure. A streak of rose glowed in the east behind the amethyst peaks. Her face reflected it like a mirror.

"I don't have to go back East," she said presently. They had left the corral and were under the big cottonwoods by Patrick Casey's grave. "Do I?"

"I don't reckon you can, even if you wanted to," answered Sandy. "I forgot to tell you, Molly, that you're bu'sted, so far's the mine is concerned. Listen."

She laughed when he finished speaking.

"Is that all?" She patted the turf on the green mound. "I'm sorry, Daddy, for you, it didn't pan out bigger. But I guess what you wanted most was my happiness—and I've got that." She turned to Sandy. The big bell of the ranch boomed brassily. Molly put her hand in Sandy's. "It may be most unromantic, Sandy dear," she said, "but I'm hungry. Let's go in to breakfast."

CHAPTER XXII

The Very End.

There was a council held later that day, that was almost a council of war. Sandy was in the chair, Mormon and Sam present, Molly the indignant speaker-in-chief.

"I'm very much ashamed of all of you," she said. "An agreement is an agreement, and we were to share as we arranged. We shook hands upon it. I've had three times as much as any one of you, as it is. I haven't spent all of it, Sandy tells me.

"I've got to accept Sandy's share of it, I suppose, because it goes with Sandy. As for you, Sam Manning, you'll need your third when you marry Kate Nicholson."

Soda-Water Sam gasped.

"Marry Miss Nicholson?"

"Certainly. She expects you to."

"She—Molly, it ain't no jokin' matter with me. She wouldn't look at a rough-hided cuss like me."

"You ask her, Sammy. Mormon, I suppose you'll have to hang fire until you find out about that third wife. I hope the fourth time will be the charm. It will if you marry Miranda Bailey."

"You're sure talkin' like a matrimonial boorow, Molly," said Mormon. "I sure think a sight of Mirandy. She's different from my first three. They all married me, fo' me to look out fo' them. If Mirandy can be persuaded to take me it's becos she is willin' to look after me. She 'lows I need it," he added, sheepishly.

"Then the meeting is closed," said Molly. "I accept your apologies and you keep your money."

Mormon and Sam rose. With a glance at each other that ended in a wink, they left the room. Molly turned to Sandy.

"You didn't give me back my luck-piece, Sandy."

"What does a mascot want with a luck-piece?"

"She would like it made into an engagement ring, Sandy."

"Why not a weddin' ring, Molly, Molly mine?"

[THE END]

F. B. WOODLEY

Candidate for State Superintendent of Education.

F. B. WOODLEY

PLANKS FROM PLATFORM.

1. I promise to get for the children of Mississippi as good and as cheap books as are sold anywhere in the United States.

They are not getting a square deal now.

THE EVIDENCE.—Mississippi and Tennessee have the same Speller and the same Geography.

Dates of Adoption: Tennessee Adoption, August, 1919.
Mississippi Adoption, June, 1920.

Note the following prices:

	Tennessee	Mississippi
Brigham and McFarlane's Geography:
Book 1.	.84	1.16
Book 2.	1.33	1.80
Hunt's Progressive Speller:	.18	.72

The following states have the same Readers as Mississippi. Note the prices:

CHILD'S WORLD READERS

	Primer	1st Reader	2nd Reader	3rd Reader
Tennessee (Adopted Aug. 1919)	.24	.27	.31	.34
Texas	.28	.27	.31	.34
North Carolina	.42	.46	.52	.58
Alabama (Adptd. Jan. 1921).	.45	.48	.54	.60
Arkansas (Adptd. May 1923).	.42	.46	.52	.58
Mississippi (Adptd. June 1920).	.55	.58	.64	.74

In South Carolina the Primer and First Reader—adopted May, 1922—are sold under one cover for 60 cents. The two books cost the Mississippi child $1.13. The Second Reader has thirty-two (32) more pages than the Mississippi edition, and sells for 65 cents, just one cent more than the Mississippi edition (64c).

The Mississippi edition has 16 more pages than the Tennessee and Alabama editions. What about the difference in price? If 32 pages cost 1c, what ought 16 pages to cost?

The Russell-Bond Commission adopted the Graves Writing Books at 72c for the smaller edition and 96c for the larger edition; when the Palmer Writing Books, a much superior system was offered to them for 35c.

This Commission re-adopted the Colaw, Duke and Powers Elementary Arithmetic, an old antiquated book, at an advance of one hundred and twenty-nine per cent (129%).

The plain truth is that the people of Mississippi are paying from 20 to 300 per cent more for their school books than are the people of Tennessee, Alabama, and some other neighboring states. Neither Mr. Bond nor his coadjutors can explain away these stubborn facts.

Who is responsible for these high-price books?

The text book commission consists of eight educators, appointed by the Governor, AND THE STATE SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION. This commission adopts the elementary text books for use in the public schools of Mississippi. By virtue of his office the State Superintendent of Education is the most influential member of this commission and in recognition of this fact Superintendent Bond was elected chairman of the 1920 commission.

The official journal kept by this commission and now on file in the office of the Secretary of State, shows:

That the commission voted unanimously for the above named high-priced speller, readers, and geographies.

That Superintendent Bond voted and that the record was afterward changed to show that he did not vote.

That he made no effort to get cheaper books.

That he made no protest against the multiplicity of books adopted—number increased from 43 to 87.

Bond says: "I am satisfied with the books adopted," etc.—New Orleans Times Picayune, Nov. 25, 1920.

Surely, this commission is responsible for its acts, then how is Bond, the chairman, the leader, the most influential member to escape responsibility?

(The reports that I. F. B. Woodley, had any connection in any way whatsoever with the 1920 Russell-Bond Text Book Adoption are absolutely and unqualifiedly false.)

Bond has been superintendent for practically two full terms. He was appointed by Governor Bilbo in September, 1916. He is now asking your endorsement for a third term.

When does the present text book contract expire? June, 1925.

Is there no hope of some present relief? YES.

2. One of my first official acts as State Superintendent of Education, will be to file suit against the book companies violating Section 4603, Code 1906 as amended 1920, and compel them to give Mississippi a square deal, if there is any compelling power in the courts.

My opponent has disregarded this law, and ignored the facts. Why has he protected the interests of these publishers instead of the school children?

3. I promise to save the people of Mississippi two hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($250,000), or more, now going to the book trust. HOW?

First, by eliminating a large number of the supplemental books now used in the schools. This can be done without injuring the schools or violating the laws.

Second, by compelling the book companies to obey the law.

4. I was reared on a farm, went to school in the country, taught school in the country for years, and have profound sympathy for country boys and girls. I pledge my best efforts to get for these, as for all the children of Mississippi, the very best educational opportunities.

Bond professes great love for country boys and girls and yet he is a party to a transaction that takes the shoes from their feet, the clothes from their bodies and the bread from their mouths that they may have money to buy high-priced school books.

5. I shall gladly give to women of Mississippi the recognition to which they are so justly entitled and which they have not had up to this good hour.

MAGNIFICENT FLOUR

BREWER CALLS RUSSELL NUTTY

Former Governor of Mississippi Thinks Present Executive is a Mental Sufferer.

CLARKSDALE, Miss., July 20.—When interviewed here yesterday afternoon with regard to the letter published in the press from Governor Russell to W. M. Knox, of Oklona, Miss., in which Russell charged that "Earl Brewer, Oscar Johnston, the insurance thugs and the Birkhead woman sought to destroy him and bring his administration into disgrace," Ex-Governor Brewer said:

"Russell knows that the only connection I had with the Birkhead matter was to decline to have anything to do with it, and I am informed that Russell admitted on the witness stand under oath he knew I had nothing to do with it.

"Russell sent one of his appointees to me and expressed his thanks to me, saying that the governor wanted me to know that he appreciated my refusal to have anything to do with the case. I do not understand why Russell continues to go about the state and repeat in speeches and letter what he knows to be false.

"I am of the opinion that the governor is 'nutty' and just runs about promiscuously slandering people and can't help it or that he had acquired the habit so fixed upon him of peddling slander that he cannot shake off the habit. I think he is to be pitied, since he is suffering from such menial derangement.

"This is not the only malicious falsehood he has been peddling over the state and the people are learning he is simply dealing out lies, trying to injure someone's character. The people generally are beginning to regard him as a 'nutty slanderer.'"

CARD OF THANKS.

The taking away of our dear husband and our dear boy has left our hearts sad and bleeding. But if it were possible to soften one's sorrow and anguish of heart, ours ought to be softened by the many evidences of loving sympathy and the many kindnesses shown us during the hours he was lingering between life and death in Memphis and after his remains reached home. The many beautiful flowers spoke God's love.

Most gratefully,

MRS. JOHN R. SMITH AND TWO CHILDREN, MR. E. R. SMITH AND WIFE.

Grenada, Miss., July 25, 1923.

who, instead of ten days in jail and four years as Governor ought to have had four days as Governor and 10 years in jail.

Mr. Conner declared that folks everywhere were lining up beneath his banner because he was waging an aggressive campaign and because he would open the books when elected. He reached the supreme height of his speech when he declared in a voice resonant with feeling: "I had rather fight for cleanliness and lose than to pussyfoot and win; I had rather appeal to your reason and lose than to appeal to your passion and prejudice and be elected; I had rather come out boldly against political corruption than deal in gubernatorial generalties, making bombastic promises and talking about the wonders of the English language and the nobleness of our Anglo-saxon blood." And the women are with me too, because they see and appreciate the fact that I am making the fight for cleanliness.

Mr. Conner concluded with the statement that the fellow who kills the snakes in the Spring ought to to do the fishing and stated that he believed the people were more and more realizing that he was making the fight and that they would send him into the second primary to carry it through to victory and into the Governor's office to restore it to its old time prestige and clean up the state so that we can go forward along the pathway of progress, prosperity and lasting peace.
